Both of us hit the alarm button and we wake up getting ready for school

Title Card that says: "the life of an IT student".

We get to school and sit at our desks with the laptop open

Behind our desks we explain what we do as an IT student: "Today we will show you the life of an IT student, our life mostly consists of... well... Computers, The Internet, Hardware, Software and ETC. But I think everyone would've guessed that already.

So today we will go in more specific. Right now, we are "following" the class IT (softwareONT since Broeckhoven is gone?)

"We show some clips of us following the class and doing IT stuff and of us playing games and alt tabbing when a teacher comes"

Of course, this is not the only way we practice and learn IT, some of us might build their own computers for a friend or as student job, some of us search the world wide web for more information and some of us might already be working for a company already as a student.

The options are wide as an IT student, we can later on choose to focus more on hardware or software-based courses both again divided into multiple categories.

As for me I mostly search the web or even YouTube to find more information about stuff I like, for example: "shows a site where you can learn programming" on this site you can learn freely to learn a programming language.

There are also some students that like to experiment with old computers and try to make them work again, sometimes this might go wrong and explode but that's not of the usual. This happens a lot in between classes and that's why the class is a big mess.

"shows a clip of a computer being 'repaired'."

A part in the life of most IT-students is also gaming, this can take to late hours in the night or should I say morning.

"we show a clip of gaming in the middle of the night"

A big plus point in studying IT is that you have very flexible hours and not many hours in a week (since Broeckhoven disappeared) this way I nearly always am able to come to school an hour later and sleep longer.

We haven't decided yet who will say what.
